

Evidence or assumption?

A private card for one passage you want to check

A reaction can be real even when the explanation behind it is uncertain.
Keep what you observed separate from the story you added. Use a short scene cue in your own words; you do not need to copy the passage.

Book, edition, page and nearby scene

What is explicitly shown or stated here?

What did I infer that the text has not established?

One nearby detail that could weaken my inference

My next reread: location and question to check

Evidence or assumption?

A fictional example and a careful next step

In the invented novel The Reed House, a visitor stands outside a locked door and leaves without knocking. A reader initially thinks: She is hiding something. The action supports that possibility, but it does not prove it.

Observation

The visitor waits beside the locked door, then leaves.

Assumption

I assumed that leaving meant concealment.

Countercheck

The nearby scene mentions a closed household and a late hour. Those details could support another explanation.

Next reread

Return to the preceding exchange. Check whether anyone invited her to knock or whether the reason for leaving remains uncertain.

Do not force a verdict. If the passage leaves motive open, preserve the question. Date a correction instead of silently erasing your earlier cue. For discussion, keep every reference inside the agreed reading boundary.

Optional page cue in TabMap

I develop Reading Journal: TabMap for iPhone and iPad. A manual page mark can hold Keep, Felt, Clue or Discuss, an intensity and a private note. One complete book map is free. No app account is required; reading data stays on your device. Pro adds unlimited books, custom legends and local backup/restore. TabMap does not infer motives or complete this worksheet. All example names and scenes are invented. No learning result is claimed.